A MINT JULEP PEOPLE.

There are few people either north or south of the Ohio river who have not heard of the seductive mint julep. But few north of the river have any idea of how to make one. Outside of Dixie people who make juleps have an idea that they should have a whole orchard in them. We have known them to include a slice of orange, ditto pineapple, a couple of red rubber cherries, a stuffed olive and a strawberry. Some mixers put in gin and bitters as well as the other ingredients, surmounting the whole with a sprig of wilted mint and a dash of powdered sugar.

Those who drink them wonder what ever made mint juleps popular. For the benefit of the ignorant in search of light we present a recipe from the Kansas City Journal. Those who follow it will have a julep that is really a julep. The author of the recipe says he is from Dixie, but the statement is entirely unnecessary. And this is the way he makes them:

For each julep allow about a half-tumbler of good bourbon whiskey. Go out to your mint bed and gather three carefully selected sprigs for each glass. Bruise the leaves carefully between the thumb and forefinger, being sure not to bruise the stems, because that brings out the bitter flavor in the mint. Drop the bruised leaves into the whiskey and allow them to remain there while other preparations are in progress.

These are simple. In a small glass place a teaspoonful of granulated sugar with enough water to make a thick syrup. Crack ice enough to fill a good sized tumbler and pour the syrup into it. Now pour the whiskey in which the mint has been placed, into the tumbler containing the cracked ice and the syrup, taking the mint leaves out. Take an empty tumbler and pour the cracked ice, whiskey and syrup into it and then back into the original tumbler until a light frost appears on the outside. Stick three sprigs of unbruised mint in at the top and serve immediately.

The man who furnishes the recipe gives one warning. He says: "Never try this recipe if you wish to swear off."

Lincoln county has 210 miles of main railroad, and 29 miles of side track at a total valuation of $3,360,000. There are 100 saloons and gambling places in the county that pay yearly license of nearly $15,000. The county indebtedness is over $630,000, of which $180,000 was contracted for a court house built at Pioche in early times. The debt is owed to the bankers of the Suto estate in San Francisco, who offered several years ago to settle with county for 25 cents on the dollar.
